The GreatFire Analyzer website is a valuable resource for OSINT investigations, particularly in the context of online censorship. It offers a specialized tool that allows users to check whether a specific website is blocked or banned in China. This functionality is crucial for anyone seeking to understand the reach and impact of the “Great Firewall”, providing insights into the availability of information to Chinese internet users.

CSIS: INTERPRET CHINA

CSIS have taken a whole swath of Chinese government and CPC documents, press releases etc, and provided translations and pdf downloads. The documents date from 1979 to now, and you can filter to find which topic interests you most (foreign policy, Taiwan statements, social policy). From a Chinese language point of view it's very useful as it has a side-by-side reading function! We have found this interesting and will be using this for future articles and investigations. The resource is also good for getting some general context.

KANZHUN

Kanzhun is a really powerful company tool that will save you a lot of time searching through multiple websites for information. The information you get from this site is vast and includes address and contact info, registration/license info, leads on management and shareholders, and info around patents. The site is really user friendly and can be viewed in the language of your choice easily. We have found Kanzhun really insightful when looking for Chinese businesses during our OSINT investigations.
